The worst jobs in the world?

If you like traveling to exotic places, perhaps you <sup>1</sup>should/shouldn't try this job. Helge Zieler is a mosquito researcher. In order to study the biting habits of the mosquito that spreads malaria in Brazil, Helge <sup>2</sup>has to/doesn't have to sit inside a mosquito net while hundreds of mosquitoes bite him. Every time he sees a mosquito land on his body, he <sup>3</sup>must/have to suck it into a tube in his mouth and then blow it into a container. On a good evening, Helge can catch 500 mosquitoes in three hours. But to do this, he receives 3,000 bites (an average of seventeen bites per minute for 180 minutes). He <sup>4</sup>must not/must forget his anti-malaria pills. Once he caught malaria, and it took him two years to recover.

You <sup>5</sup>shouldn't/don't have to drive too fast on the roads, especially when you're driving in the countryside. Why? Because more than 400 million animals are killed on the roads every year. Joanne Keene knows because she <sup>6</sup>has to/shouldn't remove them. Car drivers <sup>7</sup>don't have to/must pick the animals up, so Joanne drives around in a huge truck full of dead cats and raccoons. "It's a hard job," she says, "because we work very long hours. We <sup>8</sup>must not/must be on call 24 hours a day."
