There are many different ideas about the character of people in various parts of the United States. In the Northeast and Midwest, people are said to be closed and private. In the South and West, however, they are often thought of as being more open and hospitable. Ask someone from St. Louis where the nearest sandwich shop is, and he or she will politely give you directions. A New Yorker might eye you at first and after deciding it is safe to talk to you, might give you a rather unexpected explanation. A person from Georgia might be very kind about directing you. A Texan just might take you to the place and treat you to lunch.

American could be known for their hospitality and warmth. New Englanders are thought to be friendly and they are always willing to help you. Southerners are known for their hospitality and warmth. People
