A SUCCESSFUL PROTEST

Students are cheering today because they have managed to extend the assignment submission dates a month. The students all signed a petition and appealed to teachers to consider their case.

At one point, the protest could turned more serious as students talked about whether or they should boycott some lectures, but in the end it was all resolved amicably.

One teaching representative who parents spoke to reassured that standards would not drop. The college head was happy as she pointed that she wanted to stay in touch with student needs and was happy that students felt they approach the college without any problem. She emphasised the need for students and teachers have an ongoing dialogue.

Summarising the incident, she said, 'This is an excellent example of how we to be managing academic affairs so that it works for everyone. The students made a good case in a sensible way, and their petition illustrated strongly they felt.'
