A Different Kind of Weekend

Joel Connor works in an office in Kansas. His job is a typical job from Monday to Friday. So at the weekend, he does something different; he does voluntary work. He helps different organizations and people for free. There's a new project every weekend. This week's project is helping to build a house. Joel isn't a professional builder but that's the interesting part of this project.

These 'weekend builders' are from a small town of Greensburg in Kansas. A year ago, a tornado hit their town. After the tornado, the community started a project to build thirty new houses. They have help from a building company and a group of volunteers.

The house they are working on now is for the Eller's family and it is almost ready, so next weekend, Joel is going to move to a different project. Why does he do voluntary work? He says it is because he has time, he can help people, make friends and he loves that. It's fun!

1- Joel works in a school during the week.

2- Joel doesn't receive money for his volunteer work.

3- After the tornado people in Greensburg are building one hundred houses.

4- Now they are building a house For the Eller's family.

5- Joel likes helping people and making new friends.
