

In The Bahamas, residents and visitors look forward to a festive time at Junkanoo. Read the selection below to find out about how Junkanoo has changed over the years.

Celebrating Junkanoo Part 2

1 Did you know that Junkanoo is the major festival in The Bahamas? The word 'Junkanoo' is believed to have come from 'John Canoe', who was a chief of a West African tribe. After he was brought to the West Indies as a slave, he demanded that he be allowed to celebrate with his people. At Christmas time, the slaves were given three days off. They celebrated their freedom during that time. They put on masks and adorned their bodies with leaves, paper, and other materials in their environment. Afterward, they paraded around to the sounds of drums and bells.

2 This practice continued for a long while, and then it had to be changed because some people felt that the celebrations were becoming a nuisance. The parades were only allowed on Christmas Eve and New Year's Eve. In the 1950s, the name of the festival was changed to Junkanoo.

3 Even though it has been many years since slavery has been abolished in The Bahamas, this celebration continues. The parades have become very competitive. Themes are selected, and Junkanooers spend many months in the shacks designing colourful costumes. The themes and the costumes are kept secret until the night before the parade. These costumes are made from cardboard and crepe paper and decorated with feathers and tricks. Large groups dance and perform to the beat of goatskin drums and the sounds of horns, whistles, and cowbells. The groups are judged during the parade, and prizes in the form of money are given. Today, Junkanoo parades are held at 2.00 a.m. on Boxing Day and New Year's Day in New Providence. Parades are also held on every major Family Island in The Bahamas.
