In 1969, Neil Armstrong was chosen to be the spacecraft commander on the Apollo 11 mission to the moon. To prepare for the mission, Neil Armstrong had to learn to fly a lunar landing module. During training, a malfunction tested Neil Armstrong's quick reactions once more, but Neil Armstrong managed to get out just in time to avoid crashing. The Apollo 11 mission landed on 16th July 1969. After four days they were orbiting the moon. He flew the lunar module, containing him and him, to the moon's surface, but the chosen landing site was very rocky so he had to search for another one. He touched down with only a few seconds worth of fuel left.
