A cartoon crocodile is the central figure, holding a corn cob in its right hand. It is surrounded by eight circular bubbles, each containing a math problem. The problems are arranged in three rows: two in the top row, two in the middle row, and four in the bottom row. Each problem is a three-digit addition or subtraction, with the result to be filled in a small rectangular box below the equation. The crocodile is looking towards the viewer with a friendly expression.
