Aromatherapy is the application of natural oils extracted from flowers, bark, stems, leaves, roots of other parts of a plant to enhance psychological and physical well-being. Each contains its own mix of active ingredients, and this mix determines what the oil is used for. Some are used to promote physical healing. Others are used for their emotional value as they may enhance relaxation or make a room smell pleasant.

The inhaled aroma from these "healing" oils is widely believed to stimulate brain function. It can also be absorbed through the skin where it travels through the bloodstream and can promote whole-body healing. As a form of alternative medicine, aromatherapy is gaining momentum, it is used for a variety of applications, including pain relief, mood enhancement and increased cognitive function.

Aromatherapy is used in a wide range of settings from health spas to hospitals- to treat a variety of conditions. In general, it seems to relieve pain, improve mood, and promote a sense of relaxation. In fact, several essential oils, including lavender, rose, orange, bergamot, lemon, sandalwood, and others, have been shown to relieve anxiety and depression.

Although healing oils have been used for centuries, few studies have looked into the safety and effectiveness of aromatherapy in people.
