Every two or three years, Atlantic green turtles leave their home in Brazil in South America. They travel over 2,000 kilometers east to Ascension Island in the South Atlantic Ocean.

The journey takes many months. They don't eat anything. Some turtles die on the way because they choke on plastic bags or fishermen catch them illegally.

When they arrive at Ascension Island, the females lay about 100 eggs on the beach at night, then bury them in the nests in the sand. After that, the adult turtles swim back to Brazil.

Two months later, the eggs hatch, but only some baby turtles that survive can swim back and join the adult turtles in Brazil.
