7 Read the article. Then tick the correct options below.

Teenagers can be irrational and behave in unexpected ways. They can be moody and rude to their parents for no reason. Even the most organised and responsible can often behave irresponsibly. Kindness can turn into selfishness, whilst previously talkative children might ignore you. It can be as if the child you thought you knew has changed into a teenager with an entirely different personality. But, for both parents and teenagers, it's helpful to remember that there is a very good reason for this. The human brain is always changing. After infancy, the human brain goes through the greatest level of change during adolescence. This is a very active time for the human brain in terms of development and learning new things. And sometimes, in the course of development, things can get confused. For example, decision-making processes can be overwhelmed by emotions, leading to poor decisions being made.

But, whilst it might be a difficult few years for both teens and their long-suffering parents, it's important to remember that it won't last long.
