

Reorganize these 11 sentences in the proper order.
Can you locate all the parts of the hamburger?

Finally, sports help children develop socially.

For example, playing baseball helps children develop hand-eye co-ordination when they practice catching and throwing the ball.

Sports are very important for the physical, mental, and social development of children.

Also, children can develop confidence through success in sports, and this confidence can help them in social situations like meeting new people.

For instance, sports like American football or hockey require children to learn strategy and to memorize many game plays.

First of all, playing sports helps children develop physically.

Children's bodies, minds and social lives can benefit from playing sports.

Another example is that children stay healthy and develop flexibility when they play soccer.

For example, team sports like volleyball help children make friends with their teammates.

Similarly, scientific research shows that developing fine motor skills, or the use of our hands and fingers, like we use in basketball, helps children become more intelligent.

Secondly, sports are also helpful for the development of children's minds.