There are lots of anecdotes about the Loch Ness Monster. Generally speaking, these stories are of little scientific value. _____ , they can be very interesting and exciting at times. There are people in Scotland who have claimed they have seen something in the Lake.

Gary Campbell is a doctor _____ lives in a town called Inverness with his wife Cathy. He has witnessed one of the most incredible encounters with the Loch Ness Monster. This is his story:

"It was a cold afternoon in March. I was near the Lake. I was doing my job – I'm a doctor at the local hospital – and until not long ago I travelled long distances _____ visit my patients. Some of them lived near the lake. I remember I _____ to stop my car there to relax and take some photos. That day there was _____ a strong wind that I decided to stay in the car.

Suddenly, I raised my eyes, looked up at the Lake and saw this black creature come _____ of the water. I thought I was going crazy and looked at it again. The monster went back into the water, it came out again and finally disappeared. At that moment I thought I wouldn't see the creature again, but a couple of minutes later it reappeared... this time it was very near my car. Before I was _____ to react, the strange animal came out of the water and looked at me. I was scared stiff. I knew I was not brave _____ to move, so I just looked back at the creature. Luckily, the monster finally turned and went back into the lake.

Nessie had a dark colour, an extremely long neck and it was enormous. It certainly wasn't a boat... and it wasn't a fish either! Many people think I'm not telling the truth, but I know what I saw. I'm sure it was Nessie. I know I have neither a photograph _____ a videotape to prove what happened that day. I might even get into trouble with my wife for saying this in public. Many people _____ told not to speak about their experience with Nessie because they are usually criticised for doing so; but I don't care...I'm sure I've seen the Loch Ness monster!"
