READING

Parents have a common complaint that their children after a certain age tend to disrespect them. They look for more freedom and enjoy the company of their friends rather than staying at home. These are all the changes when the kids grow from teenagers to adulthood. This is the time when they want to be treated as big but the parents still consider them small. They want to take their own decisions but they can't because parents are there to take any important decisions about their children. So these issues sometimes create a problem and this is when the generation gap comes in.

There are lots of activities which interest the kids more but parents are not willing with it. Instead of arguing with children and avoiding the discussion, it will be good that parents take a step forward and talk to their children.

Parents are the best friend of their children as they act as both good parents and friends. As parents have spent a large amount of their time with their kids, so it is necessary that parents understand what their children are saying and how it can affect their life. Any suggestions coming from parents can never be wrong, so teenagers should trust in them as they always want their children to progress in life.

Communication is the best way to bridge the gap and find a perfect solution. Parents should sit with their children and talk about their needs so that parents know their children's expectations. Parents can also listen to their problems and look for a solution which is best for them. Parents mustn't force them to do anything without interest but make them aware of their duties so that they do it willingly. As you are dealing with teenagers, you need to keep yourself in their situation and then think about it.

If parents feel that their children are disrespecting, they then tell that if their children want respect, they need to give it to other people too. This is a lifetime lesson which they need to learn as it is not limited to their home but also when they go out and work in any organization.

Children must understand their limitations. If they go beyond that, it will be difficult for them. It is the duty of the parents that they make their kids understand their limitation and define a boundary for them. This is done for the benefit of the children so that they know what is right and what is wrong for them.
