Attraction

In 2013, the public voted for a Hungarian dance group called Attraction to win the final of Britain's Got Talent. A 14-year-old comedian, Jack Carroll, was second and two singing brothers from Wales were third. Attraction was the first winner to come from outside the U.K. in the history of the show. During a performance, the action takes place behind a large white screen so the public can only see the dancers' shadows move. Winning this popular British talent show changed the lives of the members of Attraction. They now perform all over the world, and in 2014 they took part in a TV ad for a well-known British company.
