Malcolm Mejin's Diary

Malcolm Mejin is a 33-year old local author who writes novels for children and teenagers. He's been penning down his thoughts on papers since he was six years old. He said his creativity started when he saw a porcelain white angel statue with a pair of intricately carved wings. He got his first inspiration from it and began writing fantasies about angels flying all over the world. He also drew illustrations to enhance his storyline.

His hometown in Kuching inspired him to author 'Diary of Rich Kid', a 256-page illustrated novel that he currently wrote. It is an adventurous novel that tells you about the lavish lifestyle of a rich boy named Robin and his friends. The uniqueness of this novel is that you will be brought to various exotic locations and given a spectacular experience. Not just that, local references such as Sarawak Laksa and Kolo Mee give a special touch to this novel. Of course, elements of suspense were also added to create the adrenaline rush. Before 'Diary of Rich Kid', other titles by Mejin are 'Zany Zombie', 'Cool Diary' and 'Cinderella Charmed'.

Mejin adds that writing children's books allows him to be free and stimulates his creativity. He always goes on book tours and gives motivational talks in schools across Malaysia. For him, great writers are born out of readers. He explained that children need to have the passion for reading as it gives them confidence and self esteem. Reading also helps you to be aware of the happenings around you. A good book will educate and entertain readers.

PRACTICE 1

Read the text below and answer questions 1 to 10.

THE TURTLES OF WRECK ROCK BEACH

We have heard the arising reports regarding the endangered species. It is not an exemption for the sea turtles as well. Wreck Rock Beach may be a long way from anywhere but for hundreds of endangered sea turtles, it is their home. Same goes to veteran turtle monitors, Nev and Bev McLachan who comes there every summer since 1977.

Both Nev and Bev never take this role as an easy job. Sleep and turtle patrol are not bedfellows. This Sunshine Coast couple bounce along 22 km of starlit beach on quad bikes every night – often all night – during their annual eight-week vigil, looking for the loggerhead and green turtles that arrive on night tides to lay their eggs. They look for the first sign that is usually tyre-like flipper tracks between the shoreline and tussock dunes. The first loggerhead looks at first for sand dune or beach rock in the evening to start laying her eggs. The features of the massive reptilian tail and craggy parrot-like beak, the flippers jerking and breath hissing, she will hollow a sandy depression (called 'body-pitting), then dig a hole ('egg-chambering) to lay 100 ping-pong ball-sized eggs.

With expert ease, Nev notes the numbered metal tag on the front flipper and measures the shell length that is around 99.1 cm, a little above average. Other details that will be recorded are nesting time and place, species and other particulars that will be sent to a centralized database. Despite their far-flung location, Nev and Bev don't work in isolation. They're part of a long-term grassroots movement recording turtle activity at more than a dozen beaches along the Queensland coast and offshore islands. Bev says he loves going out and seeing the turtles and monitoring them but now he gets more enjoyment on looking at the databases.
