Survival story

In 1994, an Italian police officer, Mauro Prosperi, miraculously survived for nine days in the Sahara Desert. It is an incredible story of survival and endurance. The Sahara is the world's second largest desert, and it occupies 10 percent of the African continent! There is little water and food in the desert, and temperatures are very high during the day – up to 50 degrees Celsius. It is not a place you want to be by yourself, but this is where Prosperi found himself in 1994. He was a participant in an extreme sports competition called the Marathon of the Sands. The competition takes a week to complete. Participants cross 250 kilometers of the Sahara Desert carrying food and clothes on their backs. The participants only receive nine liters of water each day and tents for sleeping. During the race, a sandstorm hit the participants and Prosperi lost his way. He was lost for nine days without a compass, a cell phone, or sufficient food and water. Rescuers found him in western Algeria. He was sick from dehydration and a few kilograms lighter. He had survived on his own body fluids and by eating bats. Luckily, Prosperi recovered well from the terrible experience. Amazingly, he entered the Marathon of the Sands competition again a few years later!

1 The story is about ...

- a a man who survived in the desert for over a week. —
- b a man who survived an airplane crash in the desert. —
- c a police officer who organized a survival competition. —

2 The Sahara Desert ...

- a is the largest desert in the world. —
- b is the second largest desert in the African continent. —
- c occupies 10 percent of the African continent. —

3 Prosperi was a participant in a competition to cross the desert ...

- a in a week with only nine liters of water a day. —
- b with help only from local villagers. —
- c carrying food, clothes, and a tent for sleeping. —

4 Prosperi got lost in the desert after ...

- a he lost his compass and his cell phone. —
- b he accidentally entered western Algeria. —
- c a sandstorm hit the competition participants. —

5 Prosperi survived because ...

- a he discovered a village in western Algeria. —
- b he drank his own fluids and ate wild animals. —
- c he carried extra water in his backpack. —
