Quan used to live in a small house on the outskirts of the City with his grandma. Now, he lives with his parents in an apartment near the City Central. Living in an apartment is a very different experience. It is more convenient because the apartment is more modern and transportation is more accessible. Many places that Quan regularly visits are within walking distance. There is even a cinema at the ground floor of his apartment building. When Quan lived on the outskirts of the city, the closest cinema is 30 minutes away on bike. On the downside, the street is always busy. It's noisier and more crowded than the street Quan used to live on. Outside space is also limited making it hard to find fresh air.
