Wang Shu is a volunteer in a tiger Conservation Centre in China. He felt both sad and happy the day he took Solly, a sun tiger, back to her natural home in the forest. Hunters killed Solly's mother when she was a baby, so he couldn't do everything tigers have to do for survival in a forest. Wang had to study and accept advice before taking care of Solly. He took care of her for almost three years. He taught Solly how to live like a wild tiger. For example, he taught Solly how to hunt for preys and how to find food. He took her, once a week, to the wild and trained her to look for preys. Wang knew he can't keep Solly at the reserve forever because sun tigers belong to the forest. When, she was ready, he set her free in the forest. Today he uses his computer to check on Solly in her new home. He can do this because she has a special collar that lets him Know where she is. Wang is proud he could help Solly survive in her habitat.
