Let's Get Cooking

Every summer millions of children around the world go to camp. They enjoy swimming, rock climbing, canoeing and other outdoor activities. Imagine a camp that teaches kids to make strawberry soup, French bread, chicken curry or a wedding cake! Well, that's what children do when they go to Chef Dietrich's cooking camp in Vermont, USA. They don't just go to the camp to make biscuits. These kids learn a variety of serious cooking skills in a fun atmosphere. Mr Dietrich, who also owns a local steakhouse, operates The Kids Culinary Summer Camp of Vermont from his rural farmhouse. Each summer, 80 kids arrive at the camp to learn not only how to cook, but also how to plan a menu. What's more, they visit ice cream and chocolate factories and learn how to make sweet treats. Children can choose to stay one week or two weeks at the camp. There are two parts to the camp's programme. The first part is the cooking programme, where kids learn and practise new cooking skills each day. The second part is the baking and pastry programme, where the focus is on desserts.

A typical day at camp begins at 6:30 am when campers do morning chores that include working in the greenhouse and feeding the farm animals. Then, the kids play sport for an hour before they head into the kitchen. After cooking all morning, campers break for lunch. Next, it's a few afternoon chores and then back to the kitchen for more cooking. The children at this camp obviously like cooking and the fridge always has enough food for them to practise for hours. Chef Dietrich covers over 50 cooking topics from making sauces to learning how to use a chef's knife so when the children leave the camp, they have a good understanding of basic cooking skills.

Every summer, campers especially look forward to going on an overnight hike to the mountains where they learn about outdoor cooking over a campfire. Another popular activity is cooking for a special event. The children have to plan, prepare and serve many dishes at a special dinner. On the final day of camp, there is a graduation ceremony with the parents. After the ceremony, the kids have a chance to show off their new cooking skills by preparing a lunch for their families.
