Unit 1: Exercise 6

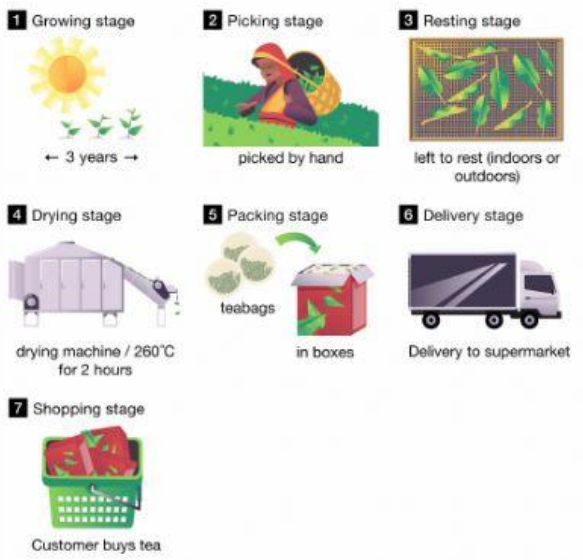

Look at the diagram again. Then put the paragraphs in the correct order to complete the report.

After this comes the packaging stage. The dried tea is made into teabags and the teabags are put into boxes. The boxes are then packed into lorries. The lorries deliver the tea to the supermarkets. Finally, customers buy the tea when they are shopping.

The diagram explains how tea is produced before it is sold in supermarkets.

It shows several stages of production from the growing and picking stages to when lorries deliver the tea to supermarkets and when customers buy it while they are shopping. There are seven main stages between the tea being planted and being bought.

First of all, the tea is grown for three years when it is picked by hand. After that, the tea is left to rest either outdoors or indoors. Next, it is put in a drying machine where it is dried for two hours. The temperature during this stage of the process should be just over 260°C.
