Paul Green, a volunteer who has given his time and skills to help victims of the 2004 Asian tsunami rebuild their homes. Here is his story.

I joined an organization of volunteers called Shelter to rebuild homes. After the tsunami, over 160 aid organizations and United Nations Agencies began operations in Indonesia to provide shelter, food and clothes, so I was not alone. Shelter organization focused on rebuilding homes. I soon realized that we weren't just rebuilding homes, but we created hope for the future.

I chose to join a housing charity, rather than a medical one, because I had previously trained as a carpenter and I believe I could make a difference with my talents. Therefore, I worked on building sites to teach people how to build their houses.

I have spent a year working as a volunteer. This was the best decision of mine. Back home in Sydney, I continued to support Shelter by telling about their charity work.

The first reason why many families do volunteer work is that they feel satisfied and proud. The feeling of fulfillment comes from helping the community and other people. In addition, volunteering is a great way for families to have fun and closer. But many people say they don't have time to volunteer because they have to work and take care of their families. If that's the case, try rethinking some of your free time as a family. You could select just one or two projects a year and make them a family tradition. For instance, your family can make and donate gift blankets for the old homeless people on holidays. Your family can also spend only one Saturday morning a month collecting rubbish in your neighborhood.

1. How do people often feel when they volunteer?
2. Why don't some people have time to volunteer?
3. How can your family help the old homeless people?
