Reading Comprehension

Canada and America share the longest border in the world between two countries. Canada is a unique country with a few interesting taboos that differ from her southern neighbor's. One is about money. It's not usually polite to discuss how much money someone has or how much they earn at their job. Another really big taboo is being rude. Canadians put a lot of importance on being polite and friendly. There's almost nothing Canadians find more offensive than rudeness. So, if you decide to visit, please be polite! Being late is also considered rude, so always do your best to come on time, or, if you must be late, try to communicate the reason why.

Most people understand that it can be hard to remember all the social rules in a new country, though, so try not to worry too much—if you do make a mistake, you can always apologize. In fact, Canadians really think you ought to apologize! That's because saying you're sorry is another important part of Canadian culture. They're also not fond of arguing. They would rather try to have a calm discussion about any disagreements and try to figure things out, rather than do a lot of arguing. In fact, Canada is world-famous as a peacekeeping country.

Canada is a great country to visit. All you really need to remember is that Canadians like to keep things positive, cheerful, and friendly. If you decide to visit, most Canadians will work hard to make sure you'll never be too lonely or homesick. So, if you're interested, why not visit for a while?
