Many years ago, there lived a very rich king. Although he was rich, he was still very greedy. He loved gold more than anything else in the world except his daughter.

One day, as he was walking among his fruit trees and flowers, he wished he had the power to turn them all into gold by simply touching them.

As the king was a good ruler and looked after his people well, a god who knew the king well granted the king's wish. The king was overjoyed. He ran through his garden and palace touching everything. And everything he owned became gold. He was now rich beyond his dreams.

The king was so happy that he ran to his daughter and hugged her. His daughter also turned into gold. In his despair, he went to the god and begged him to remove the golden touch. "You have been greedy and foolish," scolded the god. But the god took pity on the king, and removed the curse. So the king had his daughter back and was never greedy again.
