Last week, I visited an awesome museum with my mom. It was like a normal house but with rooms from different times in history. It showed the technology people used every day.

First, we visited 1950. It was very different from today. People listened to music on the radio, and they didn't have a television. The children washed the dishes after dinner. Children played with board games or played outside a lot.

Then we walked into 1970. Back then, they watched TV, but there wasn't a remote control. They listened to music on big headphones. They used a washing machine to wash their clothes for the first time.

In the 1980 room, there was a Rubik's cube and a large computer. There was a video game connected to the TV and a remote control car. People used a microwave to cook food.

The 2010 room was more like my house. There were solar panels on the roof, cell phones, tablets, and flat-screen TVs.
