Dear Diary, I have to admit that today was one of the most difficult days I ever Of course, I know risky surviving in the desert can be and it's all right with me. When you want to show people what they can do in the conditions, you have to take some risks yourself. I was looking for something to eat when I a buzzing sound. I immediately knew there was a beehive nearby and I figured it was probably a pretty big one. When you can eat worms, scorpions, live spiders or stinky meat, you don't about a few old bees ! In, it's true that I'd rather have some delicious honey than disgusting camel poo ! I saw a little cave and realized that was where the sound came from. Bees usually hate smoke, that's why I made a little fire, hoping that the smoke scare the bees away. I guess I was wrong. Instead of flying away, most of them got out of the cave and right to me, as if they had guessed I was their predator. I succeeded in cutting a large piece of honeycomb. It was sweet and delicious, yet I now wish I had not tried to that honey ! Indeed, I had bees on my face, in my hair and even two or three other inside my shirt. I tried to crush them all but it was very difficult and they stung me before dying ! The pain was so strong ! My cameraman helped me take the insects away. What I know was that I was allergic to the poison of African bees. After one hour, my was all swollen up and I could not even completely open my eyes ! I looked like an and there was no doctor around. At night, I not sleep. I am not proud to say it, but the production decided to stopped filming and transfered me to the closest hospital. I spent a whole week in bed. I know it sounds stupid for someone who tells people he's an adventurer but, well, nobody's perfect,?
