Sunday is Father's Day, and Maria wants to buy a special gift for her father. She looked at the Father's Day ads in the newspaper, but they mostly had sales on ties and bottles of cologne. Her father doesn't like to wear ties, and he never wears cologne. He used to go fishing or bowling on the weekends, but lately he's been staying home and working in the garden. Maria can spend about $45 on her father's gift.

She wants to buy him something that he will use every week. Last year she got him a sweater and two sport shirts. She wants to get him something different this year.

Old habits die hard: Stores try to cut down on plastic bags, but shopper remain stubborn.

After a rescued dugong died from ingesting plastic bags. Thailand has been on high alert about plastic pollution. This topic is being widely discussed among Thai netizens, who have been suggesting many measures, including controlling the use of plastic bags at supermarkets and convenience store.

Upon asking CP All – the owners of 7 – Eleven convenience stores – about their measures and results, it said they have enforced a strong policy to reduce the use of plastic over 10 years. Its campaign, “reduce plastic bag every day, you can do it,” has saved the company the cost of 646 million plastic bags, and this money saved will be donated to hospitals for medical equipment. As of August 29, CP All said it has donated Bt 126 million.

Tesco Lotus began campaigning for customers to “say no to plastic” since 2015 and even introduced a variety of incentives such as reward points. As of August this year, Tesco had implemented a policy of not giving out plastic bags for purchases of one or two items at all its 1,800 hypermarkets.
