Reading

- 1 Very few people can say that they have changed the world, or even one country. However, for over sixty-five years, Nelson Mandela has fought to bring justice and peace to South Africa. During his struggle against apartheid in South Africa, he started as a lawyer, became a prisoner and finally became president. In the end, Mandela won freedom for himself and all South Africans.
- 2 Only 20 per cent of South Africans are white, but by the middle of the twentieth century they owned almost 90 per cent of the land. In 1948 the government started apartheid, which means 'separateness'. With apartheid, African, Indian and Asian South Africans were discriminated against, while whites had many privileges. Only white South Africans could live in certain areas, have certain jobs and vote. Apartheid was very unfair, but people who protested against it were often sent to prison or murdered.
- 3 Nelson Mandela was born on 18 July 1918, in Transkei, South Africa. When he was twenty-one he went to university to become a lawyer. He soon became involved in the struggle to make things better for black people. Later he became involved in protests against apartheid. In 1962 he was sent to prison, where he remained for twenty-seven years. He became a symbol of freedom for millions of people around the world. He continued his fight from prison until he was released at the beginning of 1990. In 1994 he became president of South Africa and began working for a better relationship between all of South Africa's different races. In 1999 Mandela gave up his job as president to enjoy the freedom he had fought so hard for.
