New Year's Eve

4. Read this article about New Year's Eve.

Welcoming the New Year is an important event. However, in Ecuador, people used to do many things which make this celebration unique. Some traditions used to be different, but the general idea is the same. A well-known Ecuadorian tradition is to burn dolls (monigotes) at midnight. They represent all the bad moments of the old year, and it is a good luck symbol for the New Year.

Also, men dress like women, and they are "widows" of the old year. They dance in the streets and ask for pennies. People have parties with friends and family. Many years ago, families met together, and they listened to the New Year's count down on a radio station called "Radio Tarqui". After that, they made promises and, of course, they danced and talked in houses or streets. New Year is a huge celebration, and people make dinner and have a toast.

In the rest of the world, people organize huge celebrations in the streets, and the count down is on main streets. For example, in New York, people can count down until midnight at Times Square.
