

Children's literature

Stories and poems for children have a long history. Children's literature can be traced to traditional stories like fairy tales, songs that have only been children's literature in the eighteenth-century.

Modern Children's literature is categorized by a lot of genres, some of the most well-known include: picture book, traditional literature, poetry, modern fantasy, nonfiction, contemporary realistic fiction, biography and historical fiction.

Nowadays, the most popular of them are: picture books, modern fantasy and fairy tales.

A picture book is a book, typically for children, in which the illustrations are as important as or more important than the words in telling the story. Picture books have traditionally been 32 pages long. In picture books, there are illustrations on every page. Learning to "read pictures" is an important literacy skill, and picture books can play an important part in the process of developing visual literacy.

Modern fantasy is taking elements from the real world, but having magical elements that make things possible such as talking animals, toys, or going to a different realm. Stories sometimes have fantasy taken place in the real world but magical elements of fantasy make them impossible.

Fairy Tales are stories involving fantastic forces, usually good versus evil, most originating in folklore, mythology, and legend. They feature fantasy beings like dragons, dwarfs, fairies and talking animals. They aren't just for kids. In fact, many are complex morality tales.

These genres may seem all about magic, but they may become effective tools in instilling the virtues of kindness and mercy in children.
