Passage I

Molly was twelve years old. She had lived with her parents. She never went anywhere by herself, but now her teacher had planed her class to go camping at the National Park for three weeks. Her mother was very sad about this, and she was also afraid because she loved her daughter very much, and she thought, "My little girl will go alone for the first time in her life. Nobody will look after her, and she will be sad because she isn't with us." Molly said goodbye to her parents and to her cat and promised to telephone everyday. When they said goodbye, her mother cried. Everyday Molly telephoned. She never said that she missed her parents. Her mother was sad about this. But the time had come Molly telephoned her parents, she said, "The students in the camp are happy to return home soon." Molly's mother was very glad to hear that the students had said this. "She must really miss us," she thought. Then she said, "And you." "Oh, yes!" Molly answered. "We all said that it's easy to speak to our parents on the telephone everyday when we are away, but we really miss our pets!"
