Why is the UK in love with foreign TV series?

A few years ago, if you'd mentioned to a British friend or colleague that you were addicted to a Danish drama series, people would have thought you were a bit strange. But in the UK today, subtitled foreign-language dramas aren't just in fashion, they're completely mainstream.

It all began when the BBC bought the French crime drama Spiral, though it was Denmark's The Killing that was the tipping point. 'I remember hearing people talking about it on the bus,' admits Sue Deeks, Head of Programming at the BBC. 'It was clearly growing and growing in popularity, but the extent of it took everyone by surprise.' The Killing was followed by The Bridge, in which a crime is committed on the bridge between Denmark and Sweden, which regularly topped a million viewers. The British were hooked.

One of the reasons for the success of foreign TV is that it is more accessible than it used to be, thanks to catch-up and online services. And if you haven't watched the latest foreign series that everybody is talking about, you can binge watch the episodes that you've missed, and tweet about how much you love The Returned.

There may be something else in foreign TV's new popularity, too. In a world in which we're frequently distracted from our TV viewing by Twitter and WhatsApp, subtitles force us to focus. 'When you read subtitles, you have to be glued to the screen,' says Deeks. 'That concentration gives a particular intensity to the viewing experience. You just can't multitask when you're watching a foreign-language drama.'

'When you read subtitles, you have to be glued to the screen'

And while foreign-language dramas are often remade for the Anglo-American market – for example, The Bridge became The Tunnel – the originals still dominate, because they transport us to a different culture. As Walter Iuzzolino, who has set up a new streaming service dedicated to foreign-language TV, says, 'You develop a love for the distant world, because while you're watching, you're in the country. If you see something amazing set in Argentina, then Argentina itself, the houses, the people, what they wear, what their voices sound like, the language, is one of the biggest appeals. There is a huge pleasure in that.'
