Breakfast in Bed

by Kenn Nesbitt

This morning I made my mom breakfast in bed I tried to be careful, but burnt all the bread I tried to make sure that the coffee was hot, by boiling the bit left in yesterday's pot
I charred a few pancakes, potatoes, and grits The sausage, I seared into smoldering bits I made her some muffins like miniature coals, and roasted a package of cinnamon rolls
I scorched several servings of hamburger hash, and microwaved bacon until it was ash I blackened a bagel, which started to smoke The smoke alarm sounded. My mother awoke think she was panicked. She looked up in dread I proudly presented her breakfast in bed She grimaced, then silently counted to ten, and asked me to never make breakfast again
