Listen to the audio as many times as you need to, and then fill in the blanks.

New research shows that _____ people are likely to be _____ than people who are not so nice. Researchers _____ at how the personalities of different people _____ how rich or _____ they were. The researchers found that people with a nice, _____ personality were _____ off financially than people who were more _____. Kinder people found it more difficult to look _____ their money. Researcher Dr Joe Gladstone said this was because of the "agreeableness" of people who were _____, more _____ and more caring. He said: "We find that agreeableness is associated with various [signs] of financial hardship, including _____ savings, higher _____ and higher _____ rates."

The researchers looked at _____ from different sources, including two _____ surveys taken by almost 4,000 participants. The data included _____ to questions on people's financial _____, how people got into debt, and people's attitude towards _____. They compared this data _____ surveys in which almost 5,000 people answered _____ about their personality and their agreeableness. The researchers said _____ people seemed to care _____ about money and so did not look after or _____ their money wisely. Researcher Sandra Matz said that being kind and trusting had "financial costs". She wanted to _____ understand, "why _____ guys seem to _____ last".

LIVEWORKSHEETS