Concluding paragraph.

1

These two forms of transport provide clear advantages for most people; they are similar in certain ways: like private, public cuts travel time, allowing people to commute farther to work or school. And unlike the bicycle, all vehicles are capable of providing a level of comfort with modern technology, such as air conditioning and heating.

2

Most people prefer to use a mix of private and public transportation, depending on circumstances. Nevertheless, if I could choose only one means of them, I'd go with the car. It has its advantages; I like both to travel alone or with my family and to be able to plan my own schedule. All in all, I'd say I'm a car person.

3

Public and private transportation have pros and cons, so it is fortunate to have options. To make a choice, you could take into account convenience, cost, destination, and the needs and tastes of the people you are traveling with as well. Other factors to consider are the length of the trip and (if it's important to you) the environmental impact of the means you choose.

4

On the other hand, public and private transportation are different in more ways than they are similar. Cars and bicycles offer a level of privacy and convenience not available in public transport. You can make your own schedule, take a detour and not have to pay fares or deal with people you don't want to be with. However, it is only with public one that you can move around, relax and not have to pay attention to traffic or weather conditions.
