The Coen brothers

Joel and Ethan Coen are both American film-makers. They write, direct and produce films together. Since 1984, they have made almost 20 films and have received more than 30 Oscar nominations. The brothers were born in Minnesota in the USA. Joel was born in 1954 and Ethan in 1957. Their interest in films became noticeable while they were still children. For example, when Joel bought a video camera, the brothers together with a friend tried to remake the films that they saw on television. After finishing high school in Minnesota, Joel studied Film-Making at New York University, while Ethan studied Philosophy at Princeton University in New Jersey. In 1984 they made their first film called Blood Simple, which contained some features typical in their later films, such as having dark humour and a simple plot with some unexpected moments. However, their first really successful film was Raising Arizona, starring Nicolas Cage and Holly Hunter in 1987. The Coen brothers became famous in 1996 when they produced and directed the hit film Fargo, starring Frances McDormand, who is also Joel's wife. She won a best actress Oscar award for her performance in this film. Two years later, the Coen brothers wrote, directed and produced a film called The Big Lebowski starring Jeff Bridges. In 2001, they made a black and white thriller called The Man Who Wasn't There. A lot of film critics think that this is their best film. However, their most famous film is the 2007 western No Country for Old Men. In this film, one of the characters finds two million dollars of stolen money and decides to keep it. Some other people are looking for the money, including Javier Bardem, who plays the part of a killer. Bardem won an Oscar for his performance in this film. In 2010, the Coen brothers directed and produced another western called True Grit. The western, which tells the story of a 14-year-old girl trying to find her father's killer, was nominated for 10 Oscars, but, unfortunately, it didn't win any.
