Business traveller: Socialising while away

By Rhymer Rigby

When travelling for business there can be a lot of pressure to socialise with colleagues and clients. How should you balance work and entertaining, when what you really want to do is fall asleep in front of a film?

You are always working

Etiquette consultant William Hanson says that when with customers, you need to remember that you are at work. 'You are an ambassador for your company,' he says. 'If you're trying to secure a contract, you'll need to socialise well, as you and your company may well be judged by how you behave. Good manners mean you have to look interested through dull stories.'

The setting may be a little more informal but there are boundaries you shouldn't cross. Your boss is still your manager and clients are still clients.

Make your excuses

If you're with colleagues, and you want to get an early night, that's probably OK. 'Just politely excuse yourself,' says Mr Hanson.

However, he adds, bear in mind that the rest of the group will continue having fun and that you risk being 'a little bit of an outsider the next morning'.

So find the right balance – if you always go to bed early, you will miss out. With clients, it is a little different. If it is an important contract, you probably have to do what they want to do – within reason. Obviously, you shouldn't do anything illegal.

Follow up

If a client has taken you out for a meal, it is a nice touch to handwrite a thank-you note. Few people expect this – and they will certainly remember you for it.

B Read the article again. Choose the best option to complete the sentences.

- 1 If you want to leave a social occasion early, you should _____.
 - a) be pleasant about it
 - b) get someone to leave with you
 - c) try to leave without being noticed
- 2 If you _____ go to bed early, you probably won't feel a part of the team.
 - a) never
 - b) always
 - c) occasionally
- 3 When you're out with important clients, you should _____.
 - a) pay for everything
 - b) avoid talking about work
 - c) try to do what they want to do
- 4 When you're joining in with clients, you _____ break the law.
 - a) shouldn't
 - b) have to
 - c) may
- 5 A handwritten thank-you note for a business meal is _____.
 - a) too old-fashioned
 - b) a good idea
 - c) usually necessary
