Elephant Conservation Centre

My name is Ratana and I live in Lampang, Thailand. I work in an elephant Conservation Centre where we work to give elephants a safe place to live. Even though hundreds of thousands of elephants once lived in Asia, there are now less than forty thousand left.

Wild elephants need large areas to live in; they need fresh water and lots of jungle for food. In modern times, much of the forest has been logged for timber and to make room for crops.

People don't like elephants walking in their fields and stealing their crops, so they often kill them. People also hunt elephants to take their tusks to sell the ivory. Elephants are also captured when they are young to be used for tourism or as workers.
