Unit 6: Exercise 4

Read the information. Then complete the summary. Use the words in the box. There are more words than you need.

Look at the Reading passage in detail and find the part which each statement summarises. Then choose the word which fits best.

How leisure time developed

The beginning of what we now know as tourism – travelling as a leisure activity – didn't exist for the majority of people before the 1900s. Although people had been participating in travel activities for centuries beforehand, it had been something that only those fortunate people who had a lot of money and free time could enjoy. Either that, or people would travel on pilgrimages, to visit sacred shrines, cathedrals or other places with spiritual or holy significance.

For ordinary people, however, the experience of having 'time off' only really began after the period of history in which people started using machines and tools to manufacture goods on a mass scale. Once this began in Europe in the 1700s, the idea of a 'working day' independent of the seasons or weather emerged. However, most factory workers had no realistic chance of a vacation. Many had to work continuous ten-hour days in monotonous jobs. Even our modern idea of the 'weekend' is a relatively recent phenomenon, having been created by an American factory owner in 1908 to give his workers a little leisure time. The ruling classes might have noticed that this allowance of free time made their workers more efficient during the week.

Still, the idea of an ordinary working-class person leaving their hometown for a holiday did not become a reality until the mid-1800s in Europe. Perhaps the most influential development was that of the railways. In particular, train routes were extended to connect large industrial towns with what had previously been tiny settlements on the coast, such as the town of Blackpool in the UK, where people could enjoy the fresh air, beaches and exciting new delicacies such as fish and chips. This led to the spectacular growth of holiday resorts. By the end of the 1800s, there were over 100 growing towns along the English coastline.

:: drag to move wordpool ::

| impossible | industrial age | invention of machines | more productive |

| relaxed | religious reasons | seaside towns | unpleasant | work |

| work places |

LIVEWORKSHEETS

The beginning of leisure time

Tourism was 1 [_____] for most people before the 20th century, unless they were very wealthy. Some people travelled for 2 [_____], although this can't be seen as a leisure activity. It wasn't until the 3 [_____] that the concept of having 'time off' started.

Employers began to see that having holiday time could make their employees 4 [_____], which would help their businesses. In the 20th century, the extension of railway lines to 5 [_____] led to the rapid development of holiday destinations for ordinary workers.