Tourists love to take selfies with animals. A British woman was once taking selfies with a monkey in Bali but the monkey was more interested in her smartphone. When she got really close, the animal took her smartphone and started playing with it. The monkey recorded a video, took a few pictures and brought the smartphone back to its owner.

Visitors to the zoo in Tokyo were scared when they saw a rhino running towards the exit. Luckily, it was just a simulated rhino escape to prepare zoo staff for dangerous situations like this. Such practice activities happen once a year in this Japanese zoo. Two zoo workers dress to look like a big rhino that is trying to escape from the zoo and the other workers have to react.

One of the penguins living in the zoo in St. Louis, USA is called Pengasso because he paints pictures. How does he do it? With his feet! He walks through non-toxic paint in different colours on a piece of material. In this way he creates wonderful works of art. "He loves it," say the people who take care of him.

A NIGHT AT THE MUSEUM

Every year, an event called The Night of Museums attracts lots of visitors. On this special night, museums stay open until morning. However, Stefan Kasper's night at the Rijksmuseum in Amsterdam was even more special. Kasper was the first person who spent a night alone with Rembrandt's painting "The Night Watch". No, he didn't get lost while visiting and he didn't come to The Night of Museums. Stefan Kasper's night at the museum was in fact the prize for being the 10-millionth visitor.

From May 2017, museum workers were waiting for the 10-millionth visitor to come. On 1st June, the 10-millionth ticket was sold. It was Stefan Kasper's ticket. He was visiting the museum with his students. When the teacher went through the gate, guards started clapping their hands. Then the museum manager came to Stefan and informed him about the prize. It was a night in the museum, in the room of the famous painting by Rembrandt.

"I will never forget that night. I had a delicious dinner. I took hundreds of selfies with amazing paintings. And I spent a lot of time on a large bed, just two metres from "The Night Watch". I studied every detail of it. It was wonderful," said Stefan in an interview.
