Leading to the loss of eighty-nine lives, the Surfside Champlain Tower collapse ushered in a new era of government regulation. Given the event's significance, it is incumbent upon us to maintain an unimpeachable record of safety as per local building code. Subsequently, I strongly advocate following some simple outlines to avoid future issues. There should be robust communication between the building department and us, and redundancy systems should be present where possible. Further, we should encourage competitors to engage in greater cooperation to share local topography and geological findings. Although sharing results may seem unfavorable to maintaining our competitive edge, I believe the long-term benefits would significantly outstrip any short-term dangers.
