It was quite dark, and the road was silent. Nothing moved. Elijah waited under the large trees by the post-box. Could anybody see her? She peered up the empty street, scanning the windows, the gardens and the shadowy lawns. Nothing. Taking a deep breath, she darted down the road. Without hesitation, she dashed down the pavement, tucking into the shadows wherever she could, until finally reaching the end of the road. Exhausted, she fell to her knees, overcome with a sense of relief.
