The most important invention of the 20th century ... Ever since the introduction of the Internet, people have debated over its importance as an invention. I personally believe that it is the most important form of and knowledge to date.

Fi rst of all, the Internet has united the global community. People from all corners of the globe can now c with each other in a matter of a few seconds. Friends are bei ng reunited through social and business people keep in touch on a daily basis. In addition, the cost of using the Internet is a lot lower than making an overseas call.

Secondly, the Internet has become the greatest source of Users can now stay up-to-date with news all over the world through online newspapers. In fact, with the variety offered online, they can make more objective judgements of world events. Moreover, students can use online libraries for research from the comfort of their own homes.

On the other hand, there are many dangers lurking that can be damaging both to our home technology and personal lives. For instance, there are that can attack a PC and erase all files or steal our online identity. To sum up, although there may be some threats involved in using this technolo gy, if some precautions are taken, there is no doubt in my rmnd that we have more to benefit than to lose.
