

LISTENING

Ruby: Hear this: In 1901, two years before their first(1) flight, Wilbur Wright of the Wright brothers said that man would not be able to fly for fifty years.

Chad: Ha ha! Anyway, they(2) it, didn't they? Perhaps it was just a(3) moment for him, something went wrong with their work and he couldn't cope with it.

Ruby: Maybe. Who knows? But they kept at it and went after their dreams. If they had(4), we couldn't have flown for many more years as he said.

Chad: They must have been ambitious people. I'm not sure if I could be so persistent.

Ruby: Why wouldn't you be? Think of the exams you have. Do you give up studying when you (5) one?

Chad: Of course I don't, but it's not the same. It's a big deal you know, you (6) to fly but you can't, despite every (7) you have made.

Ruby: I don't agree with you. There is no difference between an exam and an invention to me. You set a goal, big or small, and do your best to (8) it. We wouldn't learn and move forward without making(9). You should think failure as a part of the road to the goal and make(10) with it.

Chad: I suppose you're right. Let's go and study for more failures!
