

Final Test 2

A. Choose A, B, C, or D for the correct answer.

The following text is for questions 1 to 4.

Land snails range widely in size. While many of them are only a few inches long and often weigh only a few ounces, there are land snails that reach almost 12 inches, like the Giant African Land Snail, a species endemic of Africa.

Snails move at an incredibly slow speed. An average adult moves at a speed of 1 millimeter per second. While moving, snails leave behind a trail of slime, a lubricant they produce to allow them to easily move across any types of terrain without injuring their bodies. Land snails aren't able to hear at all, but they have eyes and olfactory organs. They use their sense of smell to find food.

A snail shell is made of calcium carbonate and keeps growing as long as the snail grows. It keeps adding more calcium carbonate to the edge of the shell until the snail reaches adult size.

You will find that snails are most active at night. They may come out during the early morning hours as well. Don't waste your time trying to figure out males and females, because snails are hermaphrodites, meaning that they have the reproductive organs of both sexes. They conceive and lay eggs.

The average life-span of a snail is approximately 10 to 15 years in captivity. However, it is believed that many species can live up to 25 years this way. In the wild, however, the life-span varies from species to species, but ranges from 2-3 years in a few cases and 5-7 for other kinds of land snails.

Once upon a time, in a Balinese village, there lived a giant named Kebo Iwa. He had massive strength and also a massive appetite. The villagers often asked Kebo Iwa's help to build houses and repair temples. Kebo Iwa never asked anything but a lot of food, equivalent to the portion of 100 adults. The villagers had a hard time preparing that much food, even if Kebo Iwa did nothing. If the villagers failed to provide food, Kebo Iwa would become angry and destroy houses and temples.

One day, the village was struck by a long draught and the rice fields were dry. Kebo Iwa was very angry because villagers couldn't provide him food. In his hunger, he destroyed all the houses and the temples. Everyone fled for safety. But, as they saw their sacred temples being reduced to rubble by Kebo Iwa's might, the villagers' fear evolved into vengeance. So, the villagers cooked up a plot to get rid of Kebo Iwa.

After the rampage, Kebo Iwa was tired. The villagers approached him, with loads of food. Kebo Iwa gobbled up all the food and made a deal with the villagers. He would help them rebuild, and they will provide food for him.

Kebo Iwa kept his word. He helped the villagers rebuild the temples and houses. While he was working, the villagers were secretly gathering a lot of limestone. The village chief told Kebo Iwa that, they will build a luxurious house for him if he worked harder.

After the village was fully rebuilt, Kebo Iwa's final task was to dig a well so the villagers could have enough water. He dug all the time and a mountain began to form. The villagers kept providing food for him as he continued digging.

One day, Kebo Iwa fell asleep in the hole. Upon hearing his snores, the villagers knew it was their time. They started dumping the limestone into the well. He woke up when he realized he was suffocating on water mixed with limestone. He jolted awake, struggling to keep above of the rising water. But, he could not escape the sticky mixture of limestone and water. He could only scream and writhe, until he met his demise, buried under water and limestone. The villagers cheered, they were finally free from their oppressor.

The well that Kebo Iwa dug is now known as Lake Batur, while the massive heap of earth standing beside it became known as Mount Batur.

The following text is for questions 15 to 17.

Which animal has the fastest snapping jaws? If your answer is a shark or perhaps an alligator, you will have to think of smaller animals. The answer is a trap-jaw ant, or Odontomachus bauri, which lives in Central and South America. Its mouth parts move at 35 to 63 meters per second. Another way to think about this is that the ant's jaws close at 125 to 233 kilometers per hour. That is 2,300 times faster than the blink of an eye! Scientists were able to measure the amazing jaws' speed using high-speed video techniques.

Even more amazing is the speed these ants grab food or prey, using the same energy to move. As the ant closes its jaws, it uses them to push off the ground—faster than the eye can see without slow motion video. A snap of its jaws can launch it up to 8.3 centimeters in the air.

Trap-jaw ants cover ground the same way. Not only can they quickly evade predators, animals that prey on other animals, but often a group of ants will start jumping simultaneously. Imagine a lot of popcorn popping. It would be hard to grab just one. Researchers think this "popcorn" effect may help the ants escape, by confusing their enemies.

Humans have suspected for over a century, that these ants used their jaws to jump, but have proof with today's modern video equipment.

There's so much craziness surrounding me,
There's so much going on it gets hard to breathe
When all my faith has gone, you bring it back to me,
You make it real for me

When I'm not sure of my priorities,
When I've lost sight of where I'm meant to be
And like holy water washing over me,
You make it real for me

And I am running to you baby,
You are the only one who saves me
That's why I've been missing you lately,
'Cause you make it real for me

When my head is strong, but my heart is weak,
I'm full of arrogance and uncertainty
When I can't find the words, you teach my heart to speak,
You make it real for me
