Tet or Vietnamese Lunar New Year is the biggest and the most important festival in Viet Nam. It is celebrated on the first day of the first lunar month (around late January or early February). It is the longest holiday which often lasts from five to seven days. It marks the arrival of spring based on the Lunar calendar. Many Vietnamese prepare for Tet by cooking a lot of special food such as banh chung – a traditional dish, and decorating their house with some trees such as apricot blossoms, peach blossoms or kumquat trees. Most people like a two-week period before New Year's Eve. The general atmosphere leading up to Tet is in the bustle of shopping, decorating the home, making traditional Tet food and waiting for relatives and family members to return home. Parents buy new clothes for their children so that they can wear them when Tet comes.

During Tet, there are a lot of customs such as visiting a person's house on the first day of the New Year, ancestral worship, wishing New Year's greetings, giving lucky money to children and elderly people and opening a shop. Tet is not only a time for Vietnamese people to worship their ancestors but also an occasion for family reunions. They usually return home for Tet. Some return to worship at the family altar or visit the graves of their ancestors in their homeland.
