Dear Lloyd, As you know, I traveled to the United States this summer for my family vacation. We went to Washington State for two weeks. Many people get confused and think that it is the capital of the United States, however they would be wrong. In fact, Washington State is located in the northwest corner of the country and it is far away from the capital. We visited the city of Seattle. One afternoon, we took a tour of the old underground city. The tour guide told us that the streets and buildings down below were covered after a big fire years ago. The new city was built on top of the old one. It was very dark and a little bit cold down there, but it was exciting to be under the streets of Seattle. I felt like a Ninja Turtle looking up at the city from underground! Another day we went to the Seattle Center in the downtown district. There were lots of cool museums to visit. We also went up the Space Needle, a tall tower that looks like it has an alien spaceship at the top. We took an elevator up to the top where you can see the whole city. The views were amazing because the weather was nothing but blue skies.
