A man is caught stealing books from a bookshop. The judge asks why he did it, and the thief says he loves books. What is the man's punishment? A prison sentence? A big fine? No. The man is sent to read stories and books to hospital patients. He enjoys the job and continues to do it for many years! Welcome to the new world of alternative sentencing programmes. Instead of traditional punishments, criminals get a punishment that fits their crimes

What other examples of alternative sentencing are there? Two boys were caught writing graffiti on a wall. The normal punishment for this is fine, but in this case, the boys were told to do community service. They cleaned seventy walls in three weeks. A shoplifter was caught shoplifting three times in one year in a small town in the United States. What was her punishment? She was sent to speak to shop owners. She gave advice on how to stop shoplifters. In one month she spoke to the owners of forty shops. She told them all about shoplifting and the techniques that shoplifters use. It was a great service to the community because after shoplifting almost disappeared from the town. What about more serious crimes? Is alternative sentencing possible for crimes like theft or credit card fraud? It depends on many things. Who are the criminals? Are they young? Is this the first crime? Can they change their way of life? One recent story suggests it is possible. A thief stole a lot of camping equipment. He loved hiking, mountain climbing, and other sports. Instead of going to prison, he was told to keep all the equipment and to take groups of schoolchildren and their teachers camping and hiking every weekend. He loved it, the children loved it, and now it's his job.
