Mary works in London, her office is in the centre of the city. She usually goes out and has lunch in a restaurant because she doesn't like cooking. She likes foreign food and often looks for the names of new restaurants in newspapers, because she enjoys eating new things. In some restaurants she says, "I don't like this restaurant. I'm not going to eat here again', but when she likes the food, she says, "I like this restaurant. I'm going to have my lunch here often." Two weeks ago she went to Chinese and Indian restaurants.

Two days ago she saw the name of a new Italian restaurant in her newspaper, and she went there for lunch. It was very small, but the food in it was delicious.

But then Mary found something hard in her mouth. She took it out. It was a button. "Look here, waiter!" she said angrily. "I've found this button in my food." "Thank you! Thank you!" the waiter answered happily. "I looked everywhere for it."
