The Green Turtle's Habitat

NEWS | ABOUT | LINKS | HISTORY | COMMENTS

Raine Island is a small island in the Great Barrier Reef in Australia. It is famous for its large population of green turtles. With warm water and a big sandy beach, it's usually a perfect place for the turtles.

Every year, about 60,000 turtles return to Raine Island to lay their eggs on the beach. Then, the baby turtles walk across the sand into the ocean. But suddenly, there was a problem for the turtles. The water level in the ocean was very high. The water was above the eggs. The babies were in danger.

Was there a way to help the turtles grow? Yes, there was. It was the Queensland Parks and Wildlife Service's idea. In 2014, there was a new project to put more sand on the beach and keep the island above water.

Now, the eggs are dry and the baby turtles are growing!

How can you help? You can give money to projects like this one.
