

Read this newspaper article about a night at the theatre. Complete the article with the correct relative pronouns: who, which or no pronoun (-).

There was more excitement than planned for the people _____ were watching Romeo and Juliet at the Globe Theatre yesterday evening. The play _____ ends with the death of the two heroes almost ended with the death of the actor _____ was playing Romeo! At first, the audience didn't notice that anything was wrong when the actress _____ was playing Juliet, Amanda Robinson, shouted out that Romeo was dead. People only started to react when she stood up and shouted, "Help, help, somebody help me! Andrew's heart has stopped!" Two doctors _____ were watching the play ran down to the stage to help. After some time, Andrew began to breathe again, and everybody _____ was standing near them started to relax. Andrew was taken to hospital by the ambulance _____ had just arrived, and the director climbed on stage to talk to the audience _____ he could now see as the lights had been turned on. He was sorry that the audience could not see the end of the play _____ they had paid for, but he hoped that they had enjoyed the first-ever performance of Romeo and Juliet _____ had a happy ending.

Complete the definitions on the left with the correct relative pronouns: who, which or no pronoun (-). Then match the definitions to the words on the right.

1. On this thing _____ is often made of wood the actors act out the play.
2. He was one of the most famous actors _____ has ever worked in London.
3. This is a thing _____ you need to enter the theatre.
4. These are the people _____ watch the play.
5. This is something _____ actors fight with.

- A weapon
- B stage
- C audience
- D Shakespeare
- E ticket